

Just in Time

In the year 2192, the technology exists to send digital recorders back in time to witness history. The results are preserved via holographic images for the world to see. Managing teams to record history can be stressful enough, but when the government tries to take possession of the proprietary technology from the privately held Historical Preservation Agency, dedicated historian, Caleb Hunter, must rely upon a well-connected, and sexy, developer at a government agency for help.

Can the two of them keep time travel in the hands of historians? This is a short story. It is a prequel to the novel, Time Historian.
