

Karda: Adalta Vol. I

Karda is a finalist in Chanticleer 2014 Cygnus Awards recognizing emerging new talent in the genre of Sci/Fi and Fantasy fiction. With the collapse of Earth's systems, a flurry of Ark Ships leaves for far-flung planets to colonize. The barren planet Adalta is one of those diaspora worlds. Colonized by Luddites convinced out-of-control technology is responsible for the collapse, they destroy all records of their destination, determined to return to a simpler life. Five hundred years later Marta Rowan is assigned to introduce hi-tech products to tech-resistant Adalta. And no one can know who she is or why she's there. Never before has she felt the consciousness of the creatures, the plants, even the planet itself. She can feel the hunger of the hawk diving toward the rabbit and the terror of the rabbit as the talons pierce his body. Feel the salivating hunger of the fox and the sudden alarm of the covey of quail he stalks, feel support and a connection to the tall sycamore she leans against. When she is chosen by a hawk-headed flying Karda, she begins to hear words telepathically and her connections to life around her grow more intense. All training for all her life has been Don't get attached. Don't get attached. Because when her job is done she'll have to leave. Leave the handsome Alton she's falling in love with. Leave her Karda. Leave Adalta for a barren ship-side existence until the next planet she's assigned to. When she discovers a plot by her employers to smuggle forbidden technical weapons to a blood, sex, and death magician and strip the planet of its resources. She must decide where her loyalties--and her heart--reside. Contains an excerpt from Austringer: Adalta Vol. II
