

One Last Time: Just Until the Morning Light, Interracial Heartbreak

John is an attractive Caucasian male who is separated from his wife, Diane. She has dumped him on the assumption he will come crawling on hands and knees and beg her to take him back. She also assumes she will be able to find an even hotter looking and more financially well off husband than him. She is stunned to discover that she is sadly wrong on both counts. Not only can she not find a man as good looking and rich as John, but she is shocked when he starts dating a super sexy and very nice African American lady who is twice the woman Diane ever was. However, Diane assumes her man will soon tire of the black temptress and come running back into her arms once the novelty wears off. The novelty does not wear off and at the end of three years, their upcoming divorce is about to be finalized. Diane realizes she has miscalculated the situation. John is about to marry this stunning black lady and leave his former wife twisting in the wind. For three long years Diane waits in vain for John to come back to her before the divorce is finalized, but he never does! A desperate Diane now uses their three young daughters to try and force John to come back to her. A tearful John is blown away at the chance to become a full time father again, but is equally blown away at the prospect of losing the love of his life, whom he so desperately wanted to marry. His loving black bride to be is now drowning in tears of her own, realizing that Diane is going to steal John away from her after having invested three years of sumptuous lovemaking on him. Only ten days separates the trio from a final divorce decree. But Diane is determined not to let those ten days pass without seeing John back in her arms and the divorce papers torn up. John and his black bride to be decide to spend one last night together, just until the morning light before splitting up for good. The only thing is, that anything can happen in one night.
